

Determinants of Autocoup Attempts and Outcomes

Zhu Qi
University of Essex
qz21485@essex.ac.uk

Invalid Date

Abstract

Why do self-coups occur more often in some countries but less in others? Why do they succeed more in some countries but less in others. Based on a new definition and new established dataset of self-coups, this research aims to explain the main determinants of attempts and success of self-coups.

Keywords: Coups, Auto-coups, Incumbent taken